INTIMATIONS.

£1,000 STG. Payable at Age 55, or at death if previous (even if that event occurs during the first twelve months) may be secured by a payment at the rate of:

£ 7 6	per quarter if commenced at age (n. b.)	20
£ 8 14 2	.....	25
£ 10 11 2	.....	30
£ 13 4 10	.....	35
£ 17 15 8	.....	40
£ 22 12 6	.....	45

The Company is a purely Mutual one. No liability is incurred by the Policy Holders and profits are divided among them exclusively. Of the three largest life insurance companies in the world, the ratio of Death Losses to (1) Premium, (2) to Interest, and (3) to Insurance in Force, in 1887, was lowest in the NEW YORK LIFE, whilst Interest receipts, since 1885, have exceeded losses by death by over $600,000, showing a careful selection of lives and careful investment.

CHAPTER XI.

EXCERPT.—
Philip Pennycomequick came next day to the house of mourning—mourning, because three drapers were engaged in making it—he saw that all the blinds were down. In the hall he met Salome, who was there, evidently awaiting him. She looked ill and anxious, and her eyes were bright with a feverish lustre. She had not slept for two nights.

"Fiddlesticks," said Mrs. Sidebottom, "she has made eyes at you. Girls with good eyes know how to use them; they are better advocates than their tongues."

"The difficulty to identification seems to me insuperable."

"Fiddlesticks! I have no doubt at all. He had been to her, and she has given him a coat and waistcoat. He was last seen on the same bank, not so very far from the place where the body was found. The body is discovered wearing the coat. I have told you how I explain that. I suppose Salome has made a point to you that the nightshirt was not of that of John. Jeremiah. Her mother looked after his linen."

"No, she said nothing of that."

"But I identify the shirt."

"Yes; it is one I gave him."

"You—give him an extraordinary present."

"Not at all. I was his sister; and I know that an old bachelor's wardrobe would be in a state of neglect. I intended to replenish him with something, but I thought his paucity of suspicion was an argument in itself, was the manifestation of real suffering. He could see that the girl was rendered almost ill by the mental distress caused by the loss of her friend and guardian. That she had loved him, and loved him with an innocent, unselfish affection, seemed to him undoubted."

"I beg your pardon for way-laying you, Mr. Pennycomequick; she said, in a timid voice; one who had been struck with a mortal blow, she said it, touching her lips. "But you must desire to have a word with me in private before you go upstairs to Mrs. Sidebottom."

"I am at your service." She led the way into the breakfast-room; recently cleared of the meal. She went to the window, and stood between the glass and the curtain, with her left hand entangled among the cords of the Venetian blind. In her movement, it was necessary for her to take hold of something. Her fingers clasped the green strings and played with them, as though they were the strings of a harp on which she was practising, and, strangely enough, Philip felt within him every toil; when she twanged a cord, some fibres in him quivered responsive, and was only lulled when she clasped the string and stopped its vibration.

A faint throe rose in her white face to the cheeks and temples, touching them with more than a touch of pain. In her hair, the Alpine glow after a sunburnt sun, the head of the Jægerfrau. As she spoke she did not look at Philip, but with eyes modestly lowered on the ground, or out of the window looking sideways down the street.

"What I wished to say to you, Mr. Pennycomequick, will soon be said. I shall not detain you long. I am sorry to differ from Mrs. Sidebottom, but I cannot share her conviction that the body of John Lamb is that of your uncle."

"You do not desire that he is dead?"

"No," she sighed. "I think there can be no question about that."

"Or that he was last seen on the canal bank at so great distance from where the discovery was made?"

"No," she said, and her fingers unconsciously played on the blind cords the timb of the melody in "Marche Funebre."

"I do not say no more."

"I have searched every drawer, closet, and closet. I have looked everywhere. There is no will."

"It will be at the lawyer's."

"Jeremiah never had a lawyer. That was one of his fail."

"Then at the bank."

"I expect at the bank the moment I heard of his death. I have received an answer. There is no will at the bank."

"There is time enough to discuss this later."

"No, there is not," said Mrs. Sidebottom, peremptorily. "The factory must not be allowed to come to a stand, and the business to drift away. You have no claim."

"That remains to be seen. If there be no will, I shall have a claim, and a pretty substantial one."

"Your father withdrew his share from the concern. I did not. I have my interest in the business, and will see that it is kept up. Where is Lamb?"

"The captain will be here directly. Hush! I hear him in the hall."

"Another minute! Lamb Pennycomequick entered the room, very fresh, well dressed, and pleasant."

"Lamb!" exclaimed his mother, "there is no will."

"Then, I suppose," said the captain, "we shall have to take out an administration. I don't understand these things myself, but Captain Philip is here on the spot to manage for us."

"If there is no will," explained Philip, "you, Aunt Louisa, as sole surviving sister of Uncle Jeremiah, will have to act. You will have to take out that he is dead, and that he died intestate. Then you will be granted administration as next of kin. If I had any doubt about that, he could have made a will, and then I would have been able to prevent the trial. This is the only way."

"This is the only way. My Lamb is a nephew every whit as much as you."

"Yes, but you interfere. Such is the law."

Mrs. Sidebottom was silent for a moment. Then she said irritably, "I wish now, heartily, that there had been a will. I know what Jeremiah's intentions were, and I would grieve to his heart to have them disregarded. In conscience, I could not affect his will, if I had any doubt about his intentions. If he had not made a will, I would have been able to prevent the trial. This is the only way."
